effectiveness, and safety of catheter ablation in the Medicare population. In the general population, there was moderate evidence that RFA is superior to medical therapy for enhancing patient freedom from recurrence of atrial arrhythmias in both the short and long term regardless of AF type, but reablation was common.

Catheter ablation can also treat heart rhythm disorders that begin in the heartâ€™s lower chambers, (ventricles), such as ventricular tachycardia (VT), which can be a life-threatening arrhythmia. For patients at risk for sudden cardiac death, ablation often is used along with an implantable

Catheter ablation is a nonsurgical way to treat atrial fibrillation (AFib), a type of irregular heartbeat. It destroys the tissue that may be causing the heartbeat to get off course.

Tissue contact is thus critical to achieving lesion transmural and success of radiofrequency (RF) ablation procedures, a fact recognized more than 2 decades ago. The availability of real-time contact force (CF)â€“sensing catheters has reinvigorated the field of ablation biophysics and optimized lesion formation.

This illustration shows ablation catheters being applied near the pulmonary veins in a type of cardiac ablation called pulmonary vein isolation. Atrial fibrillation ablation is a procedure used to treat an irregular heart rhythm (arrhythmia) that starts in the heart's upper chambers (atria).
