HO scale got its name because it is roughly half the size of O scale. HO scale came about in the depression of the 1930s when model railroaders needed a cheaper model train solution. After the second World War the popularity of HO scale exploded and it has been reported that today almost 75% of model railroaders are using HO scale.

The precise definition of HO or H0 scale varies slightly by country and manufacturer. HO is the most popular model railroad scale in both continental Europe and North America, whereas OO scale (4 mm:foot or 1:76.2 with 16.5 mm track) is still dominant in Britain. There are some modellers in Great Britain who use HO scale, and the British 1:87 Scale Society was formed in 1994.
